

My Honest Thoughts Of Chad Evans.

Before I met Chad, I had already heard so many kind words about him. Then I met Chad and he was everything I heard him to be plus more! I realized for my self that he is someone I would go to with my problems and also someone with great guidance. The more I learned about him the more I wanted to be a better person, I wanted to do better things for my self and realize that there is hope in this world and that I should have faith with in my self and with GOD. He also taught me that good things do come when u put your mind to it and that anything is possible all u have to do is try. I believed him because I saw what a difference he made in peoples life, helped so many people and he always put other people first even when he didn't need to. He would give his all even when he didn't believe in hiself and that would prove to him self to always believe even when he didn't want because he thought at times theres no hope for him because of his situation that he's been put in.

The family structure that I have come from is not stable, my father has always been gone. My mother was verbally and physically abusive to my brother and I. I always felt alone and didn't know what a real family was till I met Chad and saw what a great and strong family they are. I wish my father was as great as Chad and his family, I wish for that stability, that unconditional love and the hope and concern for each other, that bond will never be broken no matter how strong the judicial system is and no matter anyone says or believes. It would be a travesty if Chad isn't set free. His son wont have the complete bond, he wont be able to see how totally miraculous Chad is, please to brake the family bond. The Evans family is a model family, if people knew the Evans' it would inspire them to be the best family they could be no matter what odds are against them.

My name is Mary Bullard, please read this and know that know I know this family and they have help me believe in my family to make things better, and for my family to be closer and to forgive each other, so my family bond can be mended and we can become the family we all need.

Thank you for reading this and believing in my honest words.

Hopeful,

Mary Bullard.
